

IMP

From imposition of strict laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial; works of law, to works of faith. Milt. P. Lof.
4. Confrant; oppression.
The confrant of receiving and holding opinions by authority was rightly called imposition. Locke.
A greater load has been laid on us than we have been able to bear, and the grossest impositions have been submitted to, in order to forward the dangerous designs of a faction. Swift.
Let it not be made, contrary to its own nature, the occasion of strife, a narrow spirit, and unreasonable impositions on the mind and practice. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
5. Cheat; fallacy; imposture.
IMPOSSIBLE. adj. [impossibile, Fr. in and possible.] Not to be done; not to be attained; impracticable.
Unlawful desires are punished after the effect of enjoying;
but impossible desires are punished in the desire itself. Sidney.
It was impossible that the state should continue quiet. 2 Mac.
With men this is impossible; but with God all things are possible. Mat. xix. 26.
'Twere impossible for any enterprize to be lawful, if that which should legitimate it is subsequent to it. Decay of Piety.
Difficult it is, but not impossible. Chillingworth.
It is impossible the mind should be stopped any where in its progress in this space, how far soever it extends its thoughts. Locke.
We cannot believe it impossible to God to make a creature with more ways to convey into the understanding the notice of corporeal things than five. Locke.
I my thoughts deceive
With hope of things impossible to find. Watts.
IMPOSSIBILITY. n. f. [impossibilitas, Fr. from impossible.]
1. Impracticability; the state of being not feasible.
Simple Philoclea, it is the impossibility that doth torment me; for unlawful desires are punished after the effect of enjoying, but impossible desires in the desire itself. Sidney.
Admit all these impossibilities and great absurdities to be possible and convenient. White.
Let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fry sun, Murdering impossibility, to make
What cannot be, flight work. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
They confound difficulty with impossibility. South.
Those who assert the impossibility of space existing without matter, must make body infinite. Locke.
When we see a man of like passions and weakness with ourselves going before us in the paths of duty, it confutes all lazy pretences of impossibility. Rogers.
2. That which cannot be done.
Though men do, without offence, wish daily that the affairs, which with evil success are past, might have fallen out much better; yet to pray that they may have been any other than they are, this being a manifest impossibility in itself, the rules of religion do not permit. Hooker.
Impossibilities! oh no, there's none,
Could I bring thy heart captive home. Cowley.
IMPOST. n. f. [impost, impost, French; impositum, Latin.] A tax; a toll; custom paid.
Taxes and imposts upon merchants do seldom good to the king's revenue; for that that he wins in the hundred, he loses in the three. Bacon's Essays.
IMPOSTS. n. f. [impost, Fr. incumbit, Latin.] In architecture, that part of a pillar, in vaults and arches, on which the weight of the whole building lieth. Ainsworth.

king ulcer, which made every body fly to come near her. Arbutnot.
TO IMPOSTHUMATE. v. a. To afflict with an imposthume.
They would not fly that surgeon, whose lancet threatens none but the imposthumated parts. Decay of Piety.
IMPOSTHUMATION. n. f. [from imposthume.] The act of forming an imposthume; the state in which an imposthume is formed.
He that maketh the wound bleed inwards, endangereth ma-lign ulcers and pernicious imposthumations. Bacon's Essays.
IMPOSTHUME. n. f. [This seems to have been formed by corruption from impostem, as South writes it; and impostem to have been written erroneously for apostem, ἀποστημα, an abscess.] A collection of purulent matter in a bag or cyst.
Now the rotten diseases of the South, ruptures, catarrhs, and bladders full of imposthumes, make preposterous discoveries. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
An error in the judgment is like an impostem in the head, which is always noisome, and frequently mortal. South.
Fumes cannot transude through the bag of an imposthume.
Harvey on Consumptions.
IMPOSTOR. n. f. [imposteur, Fr. from impose; impositus, Latin.]
One who cheats by a fictitious character.
Shame and pain, poverty and sickness, yea death and hell itself, are but the trophies of those fatal conquests got by that grand impostor, the devil, over the deluded sons of men. South.

IMP

IMPOSTURE. n. f. [impostura, Fr. impostura, Latin.] Cheat; fraud; suppositiousness; cheat committed by giving to persons or things a false character.
That the soul and angels have nothing to do with grosser locality is generally opinioned; but who is it that retains not a great part of the imposture, by allowing them a definitive ubi, which is still but imagination? Glanv. Scops.
Open to them so many of the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious reserve. Evelyn.
We know how successful the late usurper was, while his army believed him real in his zeal against kingship; but when they found out the imposture, upon his aspiring to the same himself, he was presently deserted, and never able to crown his usurped greatness with that title. South.
Form new legends,
And fill the world with follies and impostures. Irene.
IMPOTENCE. n. f. [impotentia, Latin.]
IMPOTENCY. n. f. [impotentia, Latin.]
1. Want of power; inability; imbecility; weakness.

children, old decrepit persons, idiots, and cripples. Flav.
Weakness, or the impotency of exercising animal motion, attends fevers. Arbutnot.
God is a friend and a father, whose care supplies our wants, and defends our impotency, and from whose compassion in Christ
we hope for eternal glory hereafter. Rogers's Sermons.
This is not a restraint or impotency, but the royal prerogative of the most absolute king of kings; that he wills to do nothing but what he can; and that he can do nothing which is repugnant to his divine goodness. Bentley.
2. Ungovernableness of passion. A Latin signification: animi impotentia.
Will he, so wise, let loose at once his ire, Belike through impotency, or unaware,
To give his enemies their wish, and end
Them in his anger, whom his anger saves
To punish endless? Milton's Paradise Lost.
Yet all combin'd,
Your beauty and my impotency of mind. Dryden.
3. Incapacity of propagation.
Dulness with obicency must prove
As hateful, sure, as impotency in love. Pope.
IMPOTENT. adj. [impotent, Fr. impotens, Latin.]
1. Weak; feeble; wanting force; wanting power.
We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impotent, and not please ourselves.
Yet wealth is impotent
To gain dominion, or to keep it gain'd.
Although in dreadful whirls we hung,
High on the broken wave,
I knew thou wert not slow to hear,
Nor impotent to save. Addison's Spectator.
2. Disabled by nature or disease.
In those porches lay a great multitude of impotent folk, of blind, halt, and withered. Jo. v. 3.
These sat a certain man, impotent in his feet, being a Chris-ple from his mother's womb, who never had walked. Acts xiv.

Delay leads impotent and snail-paced beggary. Shakef. R. III.
3. Without power of restraint. [Animi impotens.]
With jealous eyes at distance the had seen,
Whispering with Jove, the silver-footed queen;
Then, impotent of tongue, her silence broke,
Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke. Dryden.
4. Without power of propagation.
He told beau Prim, who is thought impotent, that his mistress would not have him, because he is a sloven, and had committed a rape. Tatler.
IMPOTENTLY. adv. [from impotent.] Without power.
Proud Caesar, 'midst triumphal cars,
The spoils of nations, and the pomp of wars,
Ignobly vain, and impotently great,
Shew'd Rome her Cato's figure drawn in state. Pope.
TO IMPOUND. v. a. [in and pound. See POUND.]
1. To inclose as in a pound; to shut in; to confine.
The great care was rather how to impound the rebels, that none of them might escape, than that any doubt was made to vanquish them. Bacon's Henry VII.
2. To shut up in a pinfold.
England
Hath taken and impounded as a fray Shakespeare's Henry V.
The king Seeing him wander about, I took him up for a fray, and impounded him, with intention to restore him to the right owner. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
TO IMPOWER. See EMPOWER.
IMPRACICABLE. adj. [impracticable, Fr. in and practicable.]
1. Not to be performed; unfeasible; impossible. Had

IMP

Had there not been still remaining bodies, the legitimate offspring of the antediluvian earth, 'twould have been an extravagant and impracticable undertaking to have gone about to determine any thing concerning it. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
To preach up the necessity of that which our experience tells us is utterly impracticable, were to affront mankind with the terrible prospect of universal damnation. Rogers's Sermon.

1. Not to be storm'd; not to be taken.
Two giants kept themselves in a castle, seated upon the top of a rock, imprenable, because there was no coming to it but by one narrow path, where one man's force was able to keep down an army. Sidney.
Let us be back'd with God, and with the seas,
Which he hath given for fence imprenable,
And with their helps alone defend ourselves. Shakef. H. VI.
Hast thou not him, and all
Which he calls his, inclosed with a wall
Of strength imprenable? Sandys.
There the capitol thou see'st,
Above the rest lifting his stately head
On the Tarpeian rock, her citadel Imprenable. Milton's Paradise Regain'd, b. iv.
2. Unshaken; unmoved; unaffected.
The man's affection remains wholly unconcerned and im-prenable; just like a rock, which, being plied continually by the waves, still throws them back again, and is not at all moved. South's Sermons.
IMPREGNABLY. adv. [from imprenable.] In such a manner as to defy force or hostility.
A castle strongly seated on a high rock, joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnably fortified. Sandys.

He his own image on the clay impress. Denham.
The conquering chief his foot impress
On the strong neck of that destructive beast. Dryd. Ovid.
2. To fix deep.
We should dwell upon the arguments, and impress the motives of persuasion upon our own hearts, 'till we feel the force of them. Watts.
3. To force into service. This is generally now spoken and written press.
His age has charms in it, his title more,
To pluck the common bosoms on his side,
And turn our impress launces in our eyes
Which do command them. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam-wood to Dunfinane's high hill Shall come against him.
—That will never be:
Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Ormond should contribute all he could for the making those levies of men, and for impressing of ships. Clarendon.
IMPRESS. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Mark made by pressure.
This weak impress of love is as a figure Trench'd in ice, which with an hour's heat Dissolves to water. Shakef. Two Gent. of Verona.
They having taken the impresses of the infides of these shells with that exquisite niceness, as to express even the finest lineaments of them. Woodward's Nat. History.
2. Effects upon another substance.
How objects are represented to myself I cannot be ignorant; but in what manner they are received, and what impresses they make upon the differing organs of another, he only knows that feels them. Glanv. Scops.
3. Mark of distinction; stamp.
God, surveying the works of the creation, leaves us this general impress or character upon them, that they were exceeding good. South's Sermons.
